All works chosen in Russia and her Republics by Roy Miles

As glasnost and perestroika begin to have an effect, the interest in Russia and her culture has been steadily increasing. A recent sale of Russian Avant-Garde demonstrated not only this burgeoning interest, but also the great attraction and power of Russian Paintings.

Confirmation of this is provided by this, my third exhibition. Once again I feel most privileged to be the only London dealer to be allowed direct access to both private and public collections, and was fortunate enough to visit Armenia, Latvia and other Republics.

There are works here by Armenian, Latvian, and Russian artists, both early and contemporary. The work of Alexander Rusakov and the brilliant fantasies of Andrei Gennadiev, both Leningrad artists, as well as the work of Sergei Chepik, recent winner of the gold medal at the Salon D'Automne for his quite brilliant "Madhouse".

I hope the sheer quality and diversity of my newest exhibition gives not only an excellent cross-section of Russian Paintings but also considerable pleasure, for it is the very dynamism and freshness of Russian Art that gives it its impact. All these works are a first for London.

ANDREI BEKKER (b. 1957)

Born in Perm, central Russia, Bekker studied at both the Serov and Repin Art Institutes in Leningrad. Graduating in 1983, Bekker instantly began to exhibit at major exhibitions throughout the country. His futuristic and imaginative canvases in a very short space of time have not only found their way into major Soviet museums, but also into private collections both in Western Europe and America.
